The Rural Decision Engine

Rural entrepreneurs invest blind

No local market visibility

Urban-centric market research tools don't cover villages and small towns — entrepreneurs can't see local demand or unserved gaps.

Competition is invisible

No easy way to know how many similar businesses already operate nearby, or how saturated the local market really is.

Financing is confusing

Government schemes like PMEGP exist, but subsidy eligibility, DSCR, and bank documentation feel out of reach without expert help.

High failure, low guidance

Without feasibility data, many rural ventures fail within the first year — and there is no affordable advisor to turn to.

The Plan Behind the Possibility

Based on the data we have collected, the target market we are aiming for is teenagers up to 45 years old. This environmentally friendly product trend will be successful in the market because currently consumers are more concerned about environmental sustainability. We will also be superior to existing competitors because our products have more added value because they are more environmentally friendly.
